Katherine Alice Applegate (born October 9, 1956) is a well-known American childrens' and young adults' fiction writer. She has always loved to tell stories and wrote her first story when she was in fourth grade. She dreamed of being writer when she was young and never gave up making up stories. Her persistence in writing and reading make her a better writer. She has written books from the perspective of a gorilla, a dog, a tree, etc., because she thinks nonhuman narrators can provide a fresh perspective on the world, and encourage her to conduct more interesting research to write outside of her comfort zone. Her most popular books are science fiction, fantasy, and adventure novels. She won the 2013 Newbery Medal for her children's novel The One and Only Ivan. She also wrote some famous book series, for example, Roscoe Riley Rules, the Animorphs, Remnants, Everworld, etc.
